Wash and drain the tapioca. Bring the water and sugar to a boil; stir in the tapioca and cook until transparent. Add the food coloring. Pour into a greased 8x8 inch pan. Chill. Cut in squares and coat all sides with coconut. If done properly, you should have little rectangular-shaped sago dumplings.

Sago is obtained by grinding the stem content of a filled mature sago palm that is beginning to flower into powder and washing the starch free.

Tapioca is a starchy substance extracted from the root of the cassava plant. Tapioca granules/flakes/pellets are used to make tapioca pudding and to thicken pie fillings.
